

C: I think a couple of the musicians, I think, that mean a lot to me are Neil Young and Joni Mitchell. Just because they both represent, how they've changed lives just by their music and by their beliefs in their music, and how it translates in that way. So, I find that both of them have a strong nationalism, but also a strong core belief through their music. How it's represented in their, through their art. So that's what I find so fascinating about it. Cause the anniversary of Canada has meant a lot to me as an indigenous person, so I think level of revolt is good to see, and how they never gave up on that. So when I've been doing tours here in [Scungwaii?], and [Tandy?] and Windy Bay, that's part of what I was conveying, is that they need to begin teaching the history of the indigenous people a lot better than they have been. So if Canada wants to continue on doing these kinds of things, they should really look back at their own history and make sure that they teach it properly.
