H: Alright, so my name's Corry Hostetter. I'm the project manager for Nanaimo's Canada 150 Project. And we've created a legacy show for our community that's going to be something that happens year after year after year. 50 years ago, it was bathtub races, and we still have bathtub races today. This time it's "Black Stones and Bathtubs" and this is a musical show. We're calling it a musical revue of the town you never knew. And it's going to play at the Port Theatre for the first few years, but every, for 2 weeks every summer it will be mounted and we are, you know, we want everybody to come and see it. Especially the community and then the community, bring your friends and family. It may be something you do every year. And it's a show that's been produced by local talent, and they're the same, it's Katy Bowen-Roberts who's the producer and she also produces the Yellowpoint Spectacular. At Christmastime and it's a highly quality produced show, so we're excited about this. We want everybody to come out. It's playing between July 6th and 8th and it's only an hour long. The tickets are priced for families and so we're just saying come out, enjoy the show, tell us what you think, and then bring your family and friends.
