J: So I'm Peggy Jensen. And I had fun helping to set up this "Sit Back in Time", because I remember that my grandparents were home-sitters on the prairies and my grandmother was, I just, could do all kinds of things. And one of the things she did was build me a hope chest. So I had fun getting out the linens and the handmade doilies and all that, that she had put into a hope chest. And I also brought her silver and I think about where the silver tea set has been over the years and her silverware and how proud she was of being able to have a fancy dining room and have these fancy things. So it's fun to think back on what the parents and grandparents did in coming to Canada and setting up these things and being involved, and the passing on the traditions. So it's neat to step back in time and realize that, at our age we have a couple of generations, you know my grandchildren, to be able to pass on stories and memories of the grandparents and what they did and how they got established in Canada and pass on the traditions. So it's been fun to part of the generations' stories. And it's exciting to be a Canadian, so proud of that.
